

A

OF THE

STATE

OF THE

BRITISH NATION.

Thursday, May 15. 1707.

THE last REVIEW was a necessary Interruption from the Subject of the former, to clear up the Memory of the most Glorious of Monarchs from a slyly insinuated Aspersions thrown upon it: The Author's being at such a Distance from London and the Printer's, and being unable for that Reason to receive Intelligencies duly and in Order, 'tis hop'd will serve as an Apology, that no exacter Method is observ'd.

The last REVIEW but one contain'd Part of a Paper publish'd and dispers'd in Edinburgh, Entitled A Voice from the South, &c. which continues thus—

1. All the Men of Liberty and Property, all the Opposers of the Bloody, Tyrannical, and Arbitrary Proceedings of the former Reigns; these, whether they are Church of England Men or Dissenters, whether Men of Religion, or of no Religion, have been all for this Union, and have struggled for it, as it has been apparently the true and direct Method for establishing Liberty, restoring Right, suppressing Injury, and oppressing Powers, and erecting the just Sovereignty of Civil Justice, Law and Constitution.

2. All the Men of Peace, Charity, Temper and Moderation, that have abhorred forcing the Conscience, and ravishing Men of Principles, that have own'd Persecution to be Antichristian, and are willing People should be permitted to obey GOD rather than Man: These, whether Church of England Men or Dissenters, have have been all for it: These have sought it by all possible Methods, have argued for it on Earth, and pray'd for it from Heaven. And they that have pray'd against it, if any have been so weak, may know now whose Prayers have prevailed.

3. All the Men of Piety, Zeal and true Concern for Religion; Men whose Faces are Heaven-ward, who converse most there, and whose Interest there makes their Judgment worth Notice, who, we have Reason to hope, are directed from thence, and who always move as so directed; these have cheerfully fallen in with this Union, rejoice in it, are giving Thanks for it, and wonder to hear any of their Brethren here, who claim to belong to the same Inheritance, of another Opinion.

To look back from these, who shall we find against it, and now finding Fault with it? and the Observation here is as edifying as the other.

1. All the Men of Blood, Tyranny, and Oppression, all the Engines of Arbitrary Government, who made themselves fat with the Spoils of their Country, and that ravaged the Liberties of the People a la Dragon; all the State Harpies that fed upon the Bowels of their Native Country, and sacrificed the Laws and Properties of their Brethren, to the Lust and Avarice of their Princes; These hate the Union, abhor the Methods, and dread the Event, fearing their Hopes of being restored to the Privilege of Plunder, and the Pleasure of Blood, will be for ever blasted and destroy'd.

All the Men of Fury, Men of Persecution and Prosecution, the Bigotted Zealots either of Ecclesiastick, or Party-Tyranny, that are for driving People to Heaven against their Consciences, as we may call it; For they will force them a Way, they believe will never carry them thither. These are against the Treaty; because the Sovereignty of Conscience over the Commands of Men, being acknowledg'd by it, Men of Principles will be protected and guarded from their Cruelty.

3. All the Men of no Principles, all the Rakes, Debauchees, and Men of Scandal, all the Sons of Hell, the Factors of Crime, and Promoters of Vice; these universally clamour at the Union, as what they have good Reason to fear will be a Foundation of Law, Virtue, Punishment, and Reformation.

'Tis an unhappy Necessity forces us to add to these a fourth Sort, who we are sorry to find in such bad Company; we mean a few honest, well-meaning, pious and zealous Christians, our Brethren, and for whom we have a sincere Regard, tho' we think them un-enlighten'd, and ill inform'd in this Affair.

'Tis hard, that these should joyn to do the Work of such as these; that their Actions should correspond so much, and their End so little; that they should be so near in their Methods, but so remote in their Designs: And we thought this, if nothing else could, should have open'd the Eyes of our Brethren in that Case.

But all this is over, the Union is ended, and we were in Hopes, That as, when Men in Societies agree to be ruled by the Majority, they acquiesce in things, which perhaps they voted against; so we hoped, that all the sober, pious, and well-meaning People, would have seen themselves over-ruled as by Providence, and submitted.

But it is the Grief of good Men, and the Joy of the Enemies of our Peace, to see the same People continually accusing their Brethren, and with Fears and Jealousies, rendering them uneasy on this Account; and this is the Subject of this Paper.

As nothing can tend to promoting the real Happiness of these two Nations in the Union, like a Harmony of Interests and Affections between us; so nothing can tend to the strengthening the Hands of the Enemies of our Peace more, than to have us fill'd with Distrust, Breach of Confidence, and Jealousies one of another.

'Tis on this Account, this Address is made, humbly and earnestly to entreat all our Brethren to consider, whose Battle they fight, for whom and against whom they engage, whose whose Work they are doing, and who they are wilfully undoing: This would be a happy Meditation, and would tend very much to the bringing us all to our Senses again, to the general Quiet and Satisfaction of the whole Nation.

The Dissenters in England, whatever may be insinuated to the contrary, standing upon the same Foundation both of Liberty and Religion, as the present Kirk of Scotland, tho' with less Security, cannot see the least Reason, why they should be reflected on by any in this Church, as not being to be depended upon for their Assistance, in case of Infractions to be made on the Articles of Union, their Concern in electing the last Parliament in England, (the best that Nation ever enj-y'd) their unanimous Adherence to the said Parliament in pursuing this Union, and their known and visible Consent in every thing that could contribute to the Benefit of the Church of Scotland, may be a reason sufficient, tho' the Particulars are too long to be insisted on here, to convince any reasonable Person, that the Dissenters in England are to be trusted, depended upon, and confided in, for all they can possibly do, within the Compass of Religious and Civil Duties, to assist, maintain, support and defend their Brethren of the Kirk of Scotland, against all Manner of Injustice, Oppressions, Infractions of Treaties, Invasions of Liberties, and any Danger that can befall them from their Union with England.

'Tis plain, That whenever such Danger happens, it must be in Defiance of Law, Justice, and the whole British Constitution; and it is as evident the Dissenters, and even the moderate Church-men also, have always been the constant Opposers of all the Attempts, whether publick or private, that have been made to lessen the Authority of the Laws, and to the Prejudice of Truth and Liberty.

Nor can they now have less Concern for the General Good, Safety and Protection of the Kirk of Scotland, than for their own, the Foundation of both being alike, and the Union being as absolutely to be kept Sacred to them, as to you.

There is one thing must not be omitted here, and that is, that all the Men of Temper, Morals and Moderation in our Southern Part of Britain, however differently denominated, are now unanimously driving at a further Union, we mean that of Affection, which seems the great Happiness, the present Union is form'd to bring about; and it is the the great Aim and Design of these Men to lay aside the now antiquated and out of date Prejudices, that have so long disturb'd the Peace, and deferr'd the Happiness of Britain.

Heaven seems to have inspir'd the Nation with a new Spirit and Genius, and the old Apostolical Rule, Mark them that make Divisions among you, is not only become a Maxim of Government, but the Theme of almost all Conversations; the Test of a true Britain; and they that are observ'd to do so, are only the discountenanced, dispirited, sinking Remains of the Government's Enemies.

On these Accounts it is, That this humble Application seems necessary, at this time, to represent to this Nation, how pernicious the Endeavours of those People must be, whoever they are, that would create Distrusts, Jealousies, and Misapprehensions in the Minds of the good People here, of their Brethren in England, by which the good Effects of the Union would be, as far as lies in them; disappointed, all the mischievous Designs of a corrupted and malicious Party gratified and promoted, the Protestant Interest weakned, and the Peace of this Nation obstructed.

All which is sincerely Recommended to the Consideration of all the Lovers of Peace, and all that have a just Value for the General Good of this Church.

A S a Doctor was barbarously treated in many Pages of Elisa, a Physician of the College-Dispensary, (which gives to the People their Right to the Cheapness of the Medicines necessary in Sickness, as of Bread in Health, and preserves the Royal Family and Nobility, Nobility, by detecting the Treacheries and Ignorance of almost all the Physicians and Surgeons) is wilely libell'd by One, who is publickly known by a lewd peculiar Impudence, which sets him off in Company and Business, instead of Learning and Skill, which is more and more decry'd. He damns every one refusing to adore him; who hourly affronts the Deity, the Clergy, and all things Sacred. The zealous Publisher of the Verses extolling Sorrel to the Skies for destroying the late King, because he us'd a Dutch Surgeon of sounder Judgment and greater Success. He was advanc'd by, and now berds with the Party, which insults the Government and Ministry, and curses all its Glorious Successes. The Gentry are bullied by him, but the Poor assaulted his House, threatened his Life, as a Robber, and demanded Justice and Reparation for the known and detested Extortions. But the brave Britains from the North, rejoycing with us at the Birth of the Union, cry'd aloud; It will soon dye, Great Britain must sink under the War, by the Defeats of its Armies and Fleets, when the Atheists (the Monsters we are not plagu'd with, but are instantly reform'd or hang'd) shall be carest and preferr'd in London.

These are to give Notice.
